SOCIALISTS SEEK TO ESTABLISH NEW RULE IN SIBERIA

REVOLUTIONARY PARTY FORMS COMMITTEE IN IRKUTSK.

Absence of Principal Members of Kolchak Government Gives Opportunity.

By ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Paris, Dec. 27.—Revolutionary socialists have formed a committee government in Irkutsk, Siberia, where the all-Russian government, led by Admiral Kolchak, established its headquarters after being driven out of Irkutsk, according to news received in French official circles today. The revolutionists took possession of the Irkutsk station on the Trans-Siberian railway, the reports state.

General Popovitch of the Kolchak government is absent from Irkutsk, being on his way west to meet Admiral Kolchak for a conference regarding the formation of a ministry.

M. Tretiakov, the minister of foreign affairs, also left Irkutsk recently to meet General Semenov, the Cossack leader in the Bukhara region.

Organize Insurrection.

Taking advantage of the absence of the principal members of the government, the socialists, according to their advices, organized an insurrection.

It is considered doubtful here whether Admiral Kolchak will find anything of his government when he finally gets to Irkutsk. His present whereabouts is not definitely known.

(Dissenter from Irkutsk early this month announced that Admiral Kolchak and his staff had established their headquarters at Taiga, a town, together with Irkutsk, just to the north, has been captured by the Bolsheviks. It is reported as having encountered great difficulties with detachments of Czechoslovak troops which are enroute to Vladivostok by the Trans-Siberian railway. Those troops have been guarding the section of the line and have not succeeded in getting along well with Admiral Kolchak.

Turn Gaze on Japan.

Bands of Bolsheviks now are not far from the Balkal district, which is raising the question of diplomatic circles as to whether the United States will look upon the prospect of the presence of Kolchak's forces in immediate proximity to the Japanese sphere of influence. It is supposed here that conversations are already in progress between Tokyo and Washington regarding the Siberian question as affected by the advance of the Bolsheviks and the weakening of Kolchak's government.

Consider Situation Serious.

London, Dec. 27.—Admiral Kolchak, head of the all-Russian government in Siberia, apparently faces a critical situation, according to Moscow advices. Bolshevik forces advancing eastward along the Trans-Siberian railroad from Omsk, the capital of the all-Russian regime, are said to have taken Tomsk and Omsk and to have occupied a number of smaller towns in that region.

Admiral Kolchak and his cabinet in Tomsk recently, returning to the city, but reports received here indicate that the retrograde movement of the Bolsheviks has cut off as a result the action of social revolutionary units which have set up a new government at Irkutsk. Further another center of rebellion has developed in the Amur river valley. Blagovestensk is isolated from the outside world, according to dispatches. Soviets Get Supplies.

Taiga, which is situated at the junction between the Trans-Siberian and a spur line which runs northward to Tomsk, it seems, is a supply depot for the Kolchak forces and when the rebels fell into the amount of supplies sent in fell into the hands of the soviet armies.

Galician forces which some time ago left the army commanded by Simon Petlura, the Ukrainian peasant leader, and John Gentile, the Italian Socialist, have reacted against Denikin and have attacked the latter's army in the rear, according to Moscow reports. The Galicians are said to have been ordered to defend Kiev against soviet troops which had been moving near and nearer that city from the north and northeast.

U. S. Agreement Reached.

Vladivostok dispatches state that the United States and Japanese have reached a basis of agreement to joint action against the Bolsheviks in Siberia but details as yet are not known.

Soviet authorities in Turkestan are countering trouble, according to local dispatches, it being stated that the cities of Kokand and Sogd have been taken from the Bolsheviks. The anti-bolshevik troops are said to be advancing toward Ashkhabad.

SUPREME COUNCIL GETS REPORT ON TREATY PROGRESS

Allies Feel Railroad Material Offered by Germany is Not Sufficient.

By ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Paris, Dec. 27.—The supreme council today received information as to the result of the first meeting between German and allied military experts regarding arrangements for the execution of the treaty of Versailles.

It appeared on the first exchange of views that the railroad material offered by the Germans for the transportation of allied troops to districts where plebiscites are to be held, was considered insufficient by the allied representatives.

The council also considered the nature of the reply to the Swiss memorandum concerning the entry of Switzerland into the League of nations. The council will reply to the Swiss suggestions that its entry into the League be subject to certain conditions.

The report on the negotiations with the Germans over troop transportation questions was laid before the council by General Wiegand. The report revealed that the Germans had declared that because of lack of material it was impossible to supply the six trains daily demanded by the allies. They made an offer of four trains a day for the time required.

MT. CLEMENS MAN SUSPECTED IN DEATH OF STANLEY BROWN

Mount Clemens, Mich., Dec. 27.—As a result of further investigation into the slaying Tuesday night of J. Stanley Brown, son of a former Detroit millionaire manufacturer, Sheriff Caldwell announced today he was prepared to ask for a warrant charging him with the murder of a close friend of the dead man.

The request, the sheriff stated, would be used on information obtained from Arnold Mirian, brother-in-law of the slain man's young widow. According to Mirian, Brown was found dead at his home early Tuesday evening and told him of an engagement in Mount Clemens.

Other information in the hands of the authorities today, was a statement by a farmer who said he had seen a man, described as a point on the highway near where Brown was found dead at the wheel of his automobile early Wednesday. The farmer declared he saw Brown's machine about 10:30 Tuesday night, and that two persons secured the automobile, according to the authorities, born out of their theory that Brown was shot at close range, probably by other occupants of the car.

Hazelton's Stories by Famous Duck Hunters of America

COMPILED BY W. C. HAZELTON

A SOUTHERN DUCK HUNT.
By Harrison Miner.
The evening of Dec. 23 was warm in temperature and lugubrious in atmosphere. A warm rain pattered in a monotonous drizzle upon the cabin shingles of Camp Zephyr, corroding the gauzy of four sportsmen who had just come in from Cross Lake. There were many indications, however, that before many hours there would be a great change in the weather.

The next morning a cold wave was closing in upon the south. The huge gray-black cloudbank in the north gradually began to break up, and sections deploying like icebergs from a glacier floated across the sky.

Occasional snow flakes, winnowed from the slowly falling sleet, fluttered and swirled like tiny dispatches in the wake of breeze couriers of the retreating warm atmosphere, as the scouts of the Storm King kept forward in the shape of short key blasts, which growing stronger and bolder, assailed the thermometer and sent the mercury tumbling.

Riotous Guests Charge Forest.
From a rapidly reinforced skirmish line of riotous gusts charged through the forest, driving before them a rout of leaves and twigs and tufts of Spanish moss torn from gray-bearded live-oak trees, and the charging intermittent volleys of sleet against the camp cabin window pane, with the rattle and roll of musketry.

Sudden in the somber pre-dawn twilight, the anxiously awaited allies of the cold wave appeared, striking against the low dark sounding rocks their white voices, flashing clouds like gaunt demons, flock after flock of them, and ceaseless advanced in line and in echelon, or in great V's and spreading columns, and when over the broad sweep of the lake, wheeled and circled and bunched en masse, as they combed the currents of the gale in graceful eddies.

Early in the hunters watched the feathered army reconnoiter the environs of Cross Lake. A pang of acute regret pierced the heart and a groan of disappointment escaped when the vanguard, main body and rear eyes of the winged host, successively melted from view, beyond the murkily somber horizon, to be quickly succeeded and succeeded by a wave of innocent delight and a burst of enthusiastic cheers, when the rear guard, company by company, swept into view, and with cupped wings dropped from the clouds and pitched behind the cypress beaded to bivouac round the cockpit-bars and marsh round the various arms and pockets of the lake.

Misc Turns Into Decays.

Garrisoned mallards circled and scattered and settled loiteringly into the deeper slumbering pinacles, like the dubious crowd at a circus, rushed hel-melt into the decoy side show; swift-winged teal swept over the decoys with the speed of a reaper, swinging round in deep loops exposing glimpses of white breasts and boldly approached with headlong impetuosity plump little blue-blacks winged and glistened to their fate; while pinioned flocks of rotheads occasionally flew within range, but usually with suspicions developed by the predatory tutelage of the decoys, back buccaneers scolded cautiously down to the water, and lit beyond the reach of the blind.

By one o'clock, having bagged the limit, we signaled Leon, took up and returned to camp. In response to Leon's halloo, a little colored boy with eyes as big as saucers met us at the landing with a shotgun and the old darky's embellished and illustrated vision of the shoot with music as sweet to the ears of the boy as the wind of horn to bound.

As we drove to the cabin the Major asked:

"Leon, have you got room for one of Dink's decoys? The bunch of them, now, are nice brown gray, with buttered comb and cold, fresh butterball."

"Looky here, Boss! Please sir, doan talk so loud! Ef dat mule hears you, he'll run away, wid us shore!"

While the decoys were being set out, a flock of pintos swooped down silently, ran suddenly with astonished quacks and frenzied flapping of wings when they spied the figures in the boat, then circled round and

BY ASSOCIATED PRESS

Berlin, (By Mail).—Many returned German prisoners are applying to the military department for new Iron Crosses, saying the originals were taken from them by the entente. Not a single prisoner so far is known to have admitted that he is a German soldier.

The German government demands proof that the crosses were actually taken.

EGYPT: A RIP VAN WINKLE OF HISTORY.

Egypt is termed "a perennial Rip Van Winkle of history" in a bulletin from the National Geographic society, which makes the present Egyptian home rule's agitation the occasion of a review of that country's glorious past.

Quoting from a communication to the society by James Baikie, the bulletin says:

"We owe the framework into which we try to fit the facts of Egyptian history to the ancient historian, Manetho, scattered fragments of whose history of Egypt, dating from the third century B. C., have come down to us in the works of various ancient authors. He recognized thirty dynasties of Egyptian monarchs."

"Manetho's assertion that one of the early kings was slain by a hippopotamus, and that in the reign of another the Nile flowed with honey, may be mere fables; but the men were there, and their royalty was a very real and tangible thing. Since the early nineteen investigations have been carried out which have resulted in the discovery of the tombs of many of these ancient royalties and the accumulation of a most interesting mass of information with regard to the civilization of their time, the organization of their courts, and the attainments of the race over which they ruled.

"The kings of the earliest dynasties reared no pyramids. Their tombs were great structures mainly underground—that of Ahu (who is possibly Menu, the first king of Egypt) at Nagada measures 175 feet by 88 and contains 21 chambers—built sometimes of brick, with a lining of wood, and sometimes stuccoed with stone, as in the case of the tomb of King Den at Abydos, whose granite floor furnishes the earliest known example of the use of stone in building.

"Vive la France et l'Amérique."

Brother D'Annunzio can find gratification in the thought that he has worked up a good foreign demand for his books.

The prize ring promoters seem to be establishing their own league of nations.

Modern civilization seems to consist of cultivation of the ability to endure.

Their Opinions

The Elks of Janesville had a novel and interesting plan put into effect the other evening, and tending towards a better community spirit. It was a reception to newcomers in the city, and several hundred gathered together, got acquainted—and it was worth while.

Paul Clegg, Leader.

The proposed world league pact is simply, that is would be, one to perpetuate sovereignty and integrity of a great power, each one obliged to defend the other in case of attack from without. Thus no country could aid a rebellious colony, or part of a country as we were aided in our revolution.—Kansas Journal-News.

Persons who follow the plan of adding a few loads of dressing to their gardens during the autumn months are finding it exceedingly difficult to supply their needs. Stable refuse is exceedingly scarce, due to the fact that so many horses have been displaced by autos.—Oshkosh Northwestern.

Alexander Mitchell Palmer was born in Mooschend, Pennsylvania, which is hard to find on the map, but grey up at Stroudsburg, in the Pocono mountains, which is one of these comfortable towns of three or four thousands where everybody knows everybody else's business. He went to Swarthmore college, where he was the room mate of Governor Bill Sproul, the now Republican chief executive of Pennsylvania.

Palmer studied law and worked as a stenographer to his way. He became a court stenographer, which indicates that he was pretty good at shorthand. Woodrow Wilson, the maker pathologist, the transaction of his daily duties, and so does Mr. Palmer. He sometimes hands his stenographic notes to his secretary, a fine young man named Robert T. Scott—to transcribe, and thereby creates an impasse, for the shorthand of yesterday is not like that of today.

Over on that side of Pennsylvania which borders New Jersey are the counties of Pike, Monroe, Carbon, and Northampton. According to the friends of Palmer, these used to be the part of the state, an agreement under which the right to furnish the congressman from this district should rotate among these counties. Palmer set out to smash this machine agreement and got himself elected in 1908 and re-elected in 1912. It was his first grapple with the machine.

Following that success, he tackled the Guffey machine which was statewide. He ran for national committeeman and, when Guffey was elected, impeached and tried to get himself seated by the national party. He was politely seated on the sidewalk outside, but the next year reappeared with the scalp of Guffey. This marked the passing of the old order in Pennsylvania state democratic politics. Palmer is still the national committeeman.

National Committeeman in 1912. He was national committeeman when the Democrats met at Baltimore to choose a candidate for the presidency in 1912. He was for Wilson. He left the chair in Wantage, N. J., and would not quit. Champ Clark had and held almost the necessary two-thirds, and Wilson asked that his name be withdrawn. But the fighting Quaker would not quit. He had there would have been no Woodrow Wilson in the time of the World War.

Wilson offered Palmer the place of secretary of war, which he declined because of his Quakerism. He was later offered the place of chief justice of the court of claims, which he also declined. Then, in the midst of the war, he was offered the post of treasurer.

THE TWENTY YEARS AGO.

Dec. 27, 1899.—On Christmas Eve, a colored man, named Albert Williams, was attacked on a dark street of the city and was robbed of $5 by three men.—Miss Minnie Holdridge, who is well-known in this city, gave an entertainment in Watertown last Friday.—Mr. French, the Chicago artist, gave two crayon talks at the All Souls church yesterday.

THIRTY YEARS AGO.

Dec. 27, 1889.—State Game Warden W. Y. Wentworth, of Fort Atkinson, was in the city today.—The Sunday school of the Trinity church had a Christmas tree and an entertainment for the young folks last night.—The remains of Elton Fay, who committed suicide in Rockford, were brought here this afternoon by his widow and mother.

WENTWORTH'S CHARIOT.

Dec. 27, 1899.—Another movement is now on foot in this city to form a militia company, to be a unit of the Wisconsin State-Guard. There are a large number of men interested.—There will be a meeting of the Federated Trades Council tonight. The most important business will be to consider the re-leasing of the Armory, as the lease runs out the first of the year.

TEN YEARS AGO.

Dec. 27, 1909.—John Kennedy is resting easily with little pain, it was stated today. He was the victim of an assault last Friday by Oliver Babcock. The cause of the assault has not yet been discovered.—Christmas passed very quietly in this city. No fires were reported and there was but one case of shoplifting, which was satisfactorily settled.

Heart and Home Problems

BY ELIZABETH THOMPSON
Thompson, in Care of the Gazette

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a young woman 20 years old. I am a good girl. I like to be good and kind to everybody. But why can I not gain the love and friendship of some young man? I can't find any joy in reading. I have a lot of friends and have been considered a pretty good-looking girl. When anyone is in trouble she comes to me for advice. I try to put myself in her place and study what I should do in like circumstances. Try to be as kind to them as I know how, although I have all kinds of troubles of my own.

I have been patient for a long time although my heart cries out for someone to love. There are many other parties given any care and I don't know how to get admitted with new friends. YOURS EVERLASTING.

Do you work? Since you do not enjoy reading, it seems to me that nothing but work will lift you out of yourself and help you to be happy. In case you do work, you need a change of position and should take up some profession which appeals to you more strongly.

You cannot force love. A guiding hand seems to draw our friends and lovers to us. They seem to come at exactly the right time in our lives. It is natural that what is yours will come to you.

Continue to be as loving and sympathetic as you know how. Reading will benefit you and make you more interesting to others. Perhaps, you have a hobby, such as knitting or crocheting. The field of reading is so far-reaching that you ought to find something to your liking.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a young woman 20 years of age. I wish to thank you, the girl who signed "Elinor S." for the advice she gave me in a recent letter. She must be

She Married an Average Man

By ZOE BECKLEY.

I believe it is an axiom that the silliest woman can victimize the cleverest man in the love game. It is evidently nature's provision for the weak. It seems incredible, but a woman past forty is not too old to meet a man who can look across a restaurant table and say, "I'm so frightened at life—I'm so alone, so drift, so unaccustomed to fighting for myself—" and the man opposite a dozen years younger than she, will pat her hand and whisper, "Yes, yes, you poor child, I understand."

I wonder if the recording angel weeps at this, or laughs? Do recording angels have a sense of humor? Yet this very man who allows himself to be victimized by a silly old woman, taintly veneered with refinement, would be the first to turn away shocked, from a girl of the streets who pursues her purpose franklly! How I hate the snobbish women who have no tact, and are too frightened of life to think of our serious thoughts of Eric Sands—

"Nonsense," retorts my common sense, "let Fanny Fribble seek youth and life where she happens to find her place, and let me, who is free, be Eric Sands. I make no excuses, there, save that I honestly thought he might be my true mate. If that had been the case, the happiness and betterment of all of us would have been some day."

I need Jim's look in the look. No false alarm, nobody comes in.

There it goes again—Some one has mistaken the door and rumbles stupidly about—O—it is Jim.

THE ANNOYING GERM THEORY

Once upon a time two cows got sick, and the farmer, who had them down all day, did not call him. The farmer, who owned the cows, the neighbor who owned the cows. The neighbor was incredulous and went out to see for himself. "Well," he finally admitted, "they're not cows." I still don't know my cows would do such a thing. It is more plausible to assume that the cows found the fence broken down and just walked in without meaning any harm. Whereupon the owner of the corn handed the fence, and the jury called it justifiable homicide.

Anthrax is a disease which destroys sheep and cattle and sometimes man. It is commonly called malignant pustule. Often sheep infected with the bacillus of anthrax drop dead without appreciable premonition. These, though sometimes they are staggering and trembling, hurried breathing, fever, bleeding from the nose and eyes and other orifices, and then death after an hour or two. Wool, skin, and bone, which are sometimes covered with a lesion resembling a boil or a carbuncle at the point of inoculation. The bacillus of anthrax is found in the hair or wool, on the hide, and in the pustule. In animals dead of anthrax, the bacillus is found, not in the small arteries or capillaries of internal organs, but in the lymphatic vessels.

Yet some people, usually with something to market, speak of the "germ theory" as though it were not a demonstrable fact. Unfortunately for these plausible folk belief in the bacterial origin of disease just naturally destroys the market for that which they wish to sell.

Second, the "germ theory" offers many and weird explanations for certain familiar everyday facts, such as the contagiousness of erysipelas, the risk of "blood poisoning" from unclean soaps, the way in which malarial and yellow fever spread, the manner of starting of disease by apparently healthy human carriers, and the countless lives saved by the

Chinese Would Stop Binding Children's Feet

BY ASSOCIATED PRESS
Nanking, China, Dec. 27.—An organization has been formed here by leading Chinese of the city to aid in putting a stop to the ancient Chinese custom of blinding the feet of female children. Songs have been composed by members denouncing the practice of foot-binding, and students of boys schools are being asked to take the pledge.

"I will not marry a woman with unnatural feet."

The name of the new organization, literally translated is "The Heavenly Feet Association."

Only One Paris House Is Showing the Straight Line Evening Gowns

Of all the displays in Paris which were visited by American fashion designers there was only one house which bravely and boldly exhibited nothing but straight line models.

The designer who attempted no ornamentation but would not be popular long.

Then why, whispers my conscience as I write this, "have you not some sympathy for Fanny Fribble?"

Well, I am either too selfish or too indifferent to do that. Characters in novels are usually exceptional people. In real life a situation like this of ours makes the wife's intelligence and conscientiousness of her instinct of noble self-sacrifice.

Also—and this is important—I am young. A break between Jim and me would not necessarily spell tragedy. There is much I want to do in the world, much I can do, and already I have started toward independence. The only complete tragedy in life is old age.

Golden Text: Ye shall be my witnesses. Acts 1:8

Review: THE TRAINING OF PETER AND JESUS

The lively story of the Evangelists, the "School of Christ" and the life of the reader. All who will may enter. One sees the teacher teaching, the learners learning. The teacher, his person, his character, his method, content, and aim of instruction. The students, their crude and imperfect ideas, their progress and losses, the foreglances of their ultimate attainments.

Among the Twelve two are isolated for special observation. They are opposite in temperament, and in immaturity. One belongs to somewhat different social grades, one an ordinary peasant fisherman, the other a member of a family of some means and having the entire of the high priest's palace. They were both disciples of John the Baptist and so in a way prepared to enter the School of Christ. St. John with Andrew had followed Jesus after the Baptist had pointed him out to them and at the Master's invitation had gone home with him for that interview, never-to-be-forgotten, in which John showed those traits which at once made him Jesus' bosom companion. One died and he drops out of the narrative, but that deed is of immeasurable importance. He brought his brother to Jesus. With his first word Jesus put his finger on the sore spot in his character. The boy understood who knew Simon must have put their hands across their mouths to hide a smile when Jesus called him "Stone." "Simon Stone" was a humorous paradox, for Simon was as feeble as a weathercock and everybody knew it. The only thing that changed him was consistency, never keeping the same opinion or course of conduct for long. To proclaim fifty for such a character was to prophesy the impossible. Painful and humiliating for Simon, but it was encouraging him and his friends of his great worth.

The acquisition of Simon was the most important of all. He was to become the "rock" of the apostles. Not only a rock, but a courageous leader in the teaching position in which the disciples of Jesus were so soon to be placed. Jesus' question "Who do men say that I am?" produced, as it was designed to do, the dark background of an inadroit and unprofitable public life, which needed of spiritual depth.

On that background Peter's confession stands out like a sharp cut cameo. Jesus' affirmation is that not the man (Peter) alone, but the man as a confessor (so in each successive generation) forms the rock on which the church is built. "The 'confession' which follows is the heavenly "Amen" to this earthly confession of the divinity of Jesus. That glorious scene fixed and settled the faith of the apostles which had been so shaken by the govelment of the ignorant youth, who for the Messiah. "Worldly ambitions, wife among the apostles, they lust for honor, power, emoluments, contending for offices in the coming kingdom. The perseverance of the Master with his dull scholars has one more illustration. So laggard were they that he must take a kindergarten teacher with him. He became foolish to him and, standing him beside himself, declares to the Twelve and through them to all who would be his followers, "This child, loving, docile, obedient, unselfish, is type and example of the indispensable qualities of those who will enter my kingdom. The same evidence of immaturity is shown when the Samaritan sees that the party is on its way to Jerusalem and not to Gerizim, refuse hospitality and the disciples desire to burn them up with fire from heaven. Jesus' rebuke is in substance, "How far you are from that mild and loving child, a picture of the innocence which should characterize the spirit which should characterize you, much less do you possess it?"

Even at the last Supper the old spirit of self-seeking asserts itself and the unseemly scramble for place follows. Jesus corrects and rebukes by performing him, not rebuked but necessary service. He washed the disciples' feet, something which with those oriental ideas had failed to do for the Master himself. Impulsive Peter protests, but Jesus checks him by affirming that it does not submit, he will be disgraced from the kingdom where he goes to the last extremity of asking that Jesus wash his entire body. Jesus points out the absurdity of it. As they had just come from the bath all that was necessary was the washing away of the sand that had filtered through their sandals. It was the supreme illustration of the three instances to have confirmed in his group in the garden, but they suffered the natural reaction from the great moral and physical strain of those last days. Grief itself is an epate. Three times Jesus returns to his watchers, rebuking his suffering. As the final service needs but to perform the service for which they had been selected.

While Jesus was bearing himself with silent dignity under the blazing light of the courtroom, his foremost disciple was demeaning himself most unwordly in the dim light of the crypts of Peter's lapidary room from his distant following. The very large space given in each of the gospels to Peter's denial is evidently designed. The picture is vivid, the circumstances are related minutely. The story is meant to be cautionary to all disciples in each successive age. It is as if the incident itself were saying as Peter himself afterwards said, "Be vigilante because your enemy . . ."

PERSONETTE

RAYMOND T. BAKER, called the handsomest man in the government, and few there are who know him would deny this sweeping statement. He has thick iron-grey hair with a slight wave in it which looks remarkably well-kept compared to the frowsy locks of some of his co-workers. He has large and well-shaped eyes with little wrinkles at the corners to show a sense of humor, and his smile is considered by the best feminine judges to be especially nice.

He smiles often because he has such a kindly disposition. Some time ago he wore a pink carnation in his buttonhole—at least he had one there on December seventeenth. This may seem an unimportant fact to give the world, but you wouldn't think so if you had seen him, and the carnation together. It was hard to say which was more becoming to the other.

In spite of his good looks, Mr. Baker enjoys roughing it. He comes from Nevada where he spent most of his life in frontier mining camps and enjoyed it immensely. He is the kind of man who prefers to roll his own cigarettes.

Before taking up his work in the mint he was connected with the Standard Embassy in Russia. He was there all during the first years of the war and came back in 1916 to direct the mint. It is a complicated job, directing a mint, and hard to explain. Mr. Baker has charge of all the gold and silver in the government. Two billions of dollars worth of real money are under his jurisdiction, and still he doesn't look worried.

"Just the same," he says, with one of those happy smiles, "there's a lot more work than fun to this job."

The Heavens in January

Of the Columbia University Observatory Staff.

Adding to the wonderful winter constellations the great planet Jupiter, the new year presents us with a sky which is interesting, indeed. The richest star field in the sky, that including Orion, Sirius and their neighbors, will be found in the southern portion of the sky, from zenith to horizon. Not less than seven first-magnitude stars are here, besides a number of other less brilliant but none the less remarkable members of the heavenly host.

Cose to the zenith at map time will be seen the pure-white Capella, whose light resembles closely that of our sun. Over the Great Hunter is easily recognized, with his sword being parallel to the horizon.

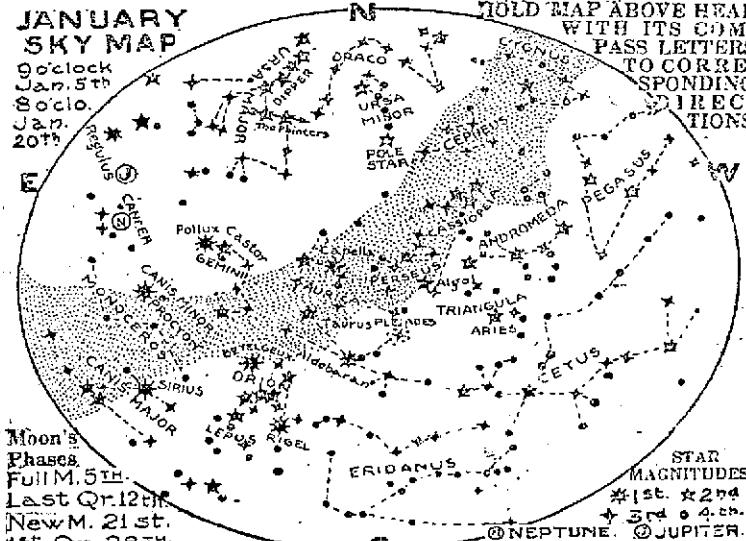

Extended to the west, the line of the three equally spaced belt stars points toward the constellation of Taurus, the Bull, containing the first-magnitude star Aldebaran. Below the famous star cluster of the Pleiades, extended to the east it points almost exactly toward Sirius the Great Dog Star, which is now well above the horizon. Northeast of Sirius is the Lesser Dog Star, Procyon, and farther north and higher above the horizon are the heavenly twins, Castor and Pollux.

Far, late to the northeast, just above the horizon at map time, is Regulus, the Royal Star of the group of Leo, the Lion. Jupiter is above Regulus in the sky and is much the brighter; it twinkles noticeably less than Regulus, which is a star of the same stellar magnitude as the latter. In the west on the other hand, we have now lost for some months to come the three first-magnitude stars, Vega, Altair and Deneb, which make a fine triangle; the Great Square of Pegasus is still in good position for observation, with the brightest star, Sirius is the brightest of all fixed stars; of the common celestial objects only the sun, moon and three of the planets exceed its brilliance. Note also the beautiful white light of its light, its actual light-emitting power, or luminosity, it is equal to forty-eight of our suns. We also know its distance with good accuracy to be eight and one-half light years; its light, traveling at the rate of 186,000 miles per second, takes nearly a year to reach us. Its actual mass, or the amount of matter which it contains, is about thirty-four times that of the sun.

Another interesting fact about Sirius is that it is really a double star, a binary, for what we see as one star with the small telescope, is really a star system of two components 1,800,000,000 miles apart, and revolving about each other in orbits completed in forty-nine years. The two stars are unequal in mass and brightness, the larger of the two being twice as big and 20,000 times as bright as the smaller.

Sirius is the first star which was observed to have a motion with respect to the other so-called fixed stars, a movement discovered by Halley in 1714, and which led to a better understanding of the sidereal universe which surrounds us. About 1820 its movement was so well known that the astronomer Bessel concluded from certain variations in it that a companion star existed, and this deduction was verified in 1834 by the actual discovery of the double nature of Sirius with a large telescope.

The earth will be in perihelion this month, i.e., it will pass through that point in its orbit which is nearest the sun. This will occur on the afternoon of the third at 5 o'clock by Eastern standard time. It may seem that the earth is far from the sun with the sun nearest to us, but as we have previously pointed out in this column, the difference between our distance at perihelion and aphelion is very small, for the earth's orbit is very nearly circular, whereas the important factors in precession of the equinoxes are the height reached by the sun in the sky each day and the relative lengths of day and night, and these are favorable to the Northern Hemisphere when the earth is in the aphelion half of its orbit.

Two planets are evening stars this month—Jupiter and Saturn. The former will be found on the map in the eastern sky, the latter in the west, both being parallel to the horizon. Extended to the west, the line of the three equally spaced belt stars points toward the constellation of Taurus, the Bull, containing the first-magnitude star Aldebaran.
